Summer Research Opportunity Program
June 22, 2015 – August 13, 2015

Enhance your academic experience next summer with SROP 2015:

- conduct research with a Northwestern faculty member,
- receive a $4,000 stipend,
- complimentary housing,
- $450 campus meal subsidy, and
- round-trip air travel expenses to Northwestern University’s Evanston/Chicago campus.

If you are interested in a concentrated academic research experience, with a diverse group of fellow students, and are intending to pursue a graduate education, you are invited to apply for the Summer Research Opportunity Program (SROP) in 2015.

Read more on the reverse side
The SROP is a summer program administered by The Graduate School (TGS) of Northwestern University, to provide sophomores and juniors an opportunity for direct involvement in research. This is an eight-week program, held annually between June and August.

In this program you will benefit from:
- faculty-supervised research,
- an end-of-summer research forum, and
- enrichment activities that will prepare you for graduate school—including a graduate school application workshop, a presentation skills workshop, GRE preparation courses…and more!

Work in the area of your own interest with a faculty member who will:
- design and monitor an appropriate full-time research project of your own or bring you into an ongoing research project,
- receive support with your outline, rough draft and final paper summarizing your research, and
- supervise your research presentation at the forum/lunch at the conclusion of the program.

We encourage college sophomores and juniors to apply who are:
- U.S. citizens and permanent residents, as well as
- students who are from groups which have been traditionally underrepresented in graduate schools (i.e., certain racial and ethnic minorities, first generation college students, etc.)

Learn More!
Visit our Diversity & Inclusion web pages at tgs.northwestern.edu/diversity to find additional information about SROP 2015, as well as a convenient online application tool.

QUESTIONS? Email us at: TGSDiversity@northwestern.edu.