Diane Nash coordinated the 1961 Freedom Ride from Birmingham, Alabama, to Jackson, Mississippi. She participated in lunch counter sit-ins, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Selma right-to-vote movement, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Appointed by President John F. Kennedy, she served on the national committee that promoted passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Diane Nash coordinated the 1961 Freedom Ride from Birmingham, Alabama, to Jackson, Mississippi. She participated in lunch counter sit-ins, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Selma right-to-vote movement, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Appointed by President John F. Kennedy, she served on the national committee that promoted passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

A Conversation with Civil Rights Icon

DIANE NASH

facilitated by Martha Biondi, Lorraine H. Morton Professor of African American Studies

5:15 p.m. to 6:15 p.m. Thursday, April 25
Lutkin Hall
700 University Place Evanston Campus

Diane Nash coordinated the 1961 Freedom Ride from Birmingham, Alabama, to Jackson, Mississippi. She participated in lunch counter sit-ins, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Selma right-to-vote movement, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Appointed by President John F. Kennedy, she served on the national committee that promoted passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Northwestern

Sponsored by the Office of the Provost, Office of Institutional Diversity and Inclusion, School of Education and Social Policy, and Department of African American Studies.